That the Insurance Agents have not changed their opinion as to the vessel's value as a marine risk may not mean very much, as her owner does not appear to ask for insurance.

That what may be termed the surgical history of the Pasig has been trathfully given by the local surveyors, whose ability and absolutely disinterested fairness may be entirely depended upon. That as the inquiry or survey on the vessel was asked for in November, and not held until February, it is reasonable to infer that something was done in the interval to make good the delects, and this supposition is strengthened by the fact that Captain Burnie's offer to point out defects was not entertained by the Court of

has furnished an opportunity for experts, who seem to have formed the opinion that the finding of the Court was in some points based upon inaccuracies. That an expert has assured me, for instance, that a thick coating of rust must have weakening effect upon an iron plate. That, to be precise to a decimal, a scale iron rust 7 inches by 4 inches, by .04017 inches, weighs 51 ounces, and contains 3.5 ounces of iron rust.

That if therefore scale contains 112 parts of iron to 48 parts of oxygen, is it possible that any expert in the world can get over that chemical truth, or the consequently clear conclusion that rust forms at the expense of the original iron is

That I am also told that plates that wore originally only a quarter inch thick have been made since to measure 5-16ths, and that, too, after twenty years' wear and ! tear; that one plate now measuring 1-8th was stated to have measured over 5-16ths some weeks ago; and that certain holes that existed before she struck and are now visible could not have been seen by the Court of Survey.

That, if such be the case, the survey could not have been so exhaustive as it was supposed to be, or the presence of human fallibility must have been demonstrated by the members of the Court.

That the legal aspects of the case, and the rights of principals, will doubtless be fully discussed by the legal gentlemen interested, but that the apparent unfairness of the decision as affecting the complainants, the local surveyors and the public -if the condition of the vessel in February was not the same as when the Steamer Companies made their complaint-requires further discussion.

That the Imperiouse, our crack flag-ship, is believed to be almost unserviceable for the present, owing to defective guns and worn-out condensers, after a year's service of the most mild description; and although our merchant ships can run their condensers for years at a stretch, our ships of war, which spend two-thirds of their time in port, are continually breaking down. That it is beginning to dawn on more minds than Lord Charles Beresford's that there is something rotten in our system, naval and military, which permits the existence of imperfect engines of war or pasteboard swords and bayonets, spite of the horde of departmental heads whose pay is drawn whatever may befal the material and machinery of the Services.

I was led to expect therewith. that Dr Atkinson had observed various symptoms which lad him to suppose that the man had been very seriously assaulted. The evidence of Dr Atkinson as given shows nothing of that kind. And also I have to remember that this alleged assoult took place on or about the kand of January, and no notice is taken of it until now, nearly six weeks afterwards. I think it is soargely fair to the prisoner that he should be placed in that position. If an assalt has been committed it ought to have been looked into at once when there was some chause of ascertaining the actual facts of the case, and also giving the prisoner an opportunity of calling any witnesses he might wish to call and who are not to be

> THE BREACH IN THE YELLOW The following letter appears in the North

China Daily News :-Sir .- I trust you will excuse my suggest ing that the information obtained by you a few days ago and commented on in your leading article to-day, relating to the breach in the bank of the Yellow River may not after all be strictly accurate. Chinese like other people are inclined to represent matters in the way most favourable to themselves, but the idea that anyone like W Ta-cheng living on the spot could telegraph to Peking that the breach was closed, when a stream 6) or 70 feet doop was flowing under the ice is more difficult to believe than the other supposition, viz, that your informant has been deceived by appearances. It is very probable that the Chinese took advantage of the ice to build a huge muss of millet stalks which was to be eventually lowered into the breach. They had space to lay 1,00) ten-inch hawsers across the breach on the ice to support such a mass when built and they would think nothing of doing it. Their methods of working are diametrically opposed to western methods, but with an unlimited command of labourare not irrational, and while the stupendous difficulties to be overcome have made most people, myself included, hesitate to accept the statement that the breach was completely closed as absolutely correct, the evidence that it is closed is so very strong as to lead one to attach little weight to information such as that lately supplied to you, which, though doubtless given in good faith, is most probably founded on an imperfect knowledge of the facts. I am, yours faithfully.

PAHANG GOLD. A STARTLING AND IMPORTANT THEORY, The Singapore Free Press says :- In an article published in yesterday's issue of our contemporary, giving some account of the r ourds of many, years ago of shipment of Palang and Sambas gold dust to Singapore. it was remarked that it was difficult to account for the strange cessation of those shipments in more recent years. As a possible logical alternatives are either that the supplies are now exhausted or have so diminished that they no longer pay to work, or that the export of gold continues but is deviated from Singapore through some other chaanel to a different destination. The problem is a curious and interesting one, and an occasional correspondent has, we firmly believe, hit upon the only rational solution. He is absolutely convinced that we are to put aside as absurd any supposition that gold dust production has censed. The extensive export of gold from Pahang has not almost vanished without rhymo or reason. The auriferous soil is there, the native workers are there, the motive for winning the gold is the same as ever it was, and as a matter of fact the production is undoubtedly got g on no less unremittingly than in those days of which we read, whose statistics are precise and not to be explained away. Our correspondent furnishes an explanation which not only accepts as a datum the continuance of all the conditions of those former years, but receives corroboration ( a collateral nature from another and a listant quarter. Although it cannot be loubted, he holds, that the quantity of gold dust panned out and collected by Malays and Chinese in Pahang is greater than ever it was, greater than in those times nearly fifty years ago when the export in nine months amounted to the value above given, it is disposed of nowadays through quite another channel. It is secretly collected by Chinese dealers and exported just as secretly in junks to the north of China. Once arrived there, the gold dust leaf. Independently of the remarkable and quite inexplicable fact of the apparent drying up of a stream of gold import that is forthwith converted into bars and gold in the times alluded to flowed into Singapore from Pahang, account must be taken of the secrecy with which the gold washing industry must have been carried on in later years owing to the rapacity and extertion of the native authorities in Pahang. A hang is quite in accordance with the probabilities, and our correspondent claims to have known for a considerable time past dust export. He states that it was this

Those who are qualified to judge say that a comparison of the two metals would show almost at a glance that the Shanghai bar gold is of a much lighter touch, being unalloyed. This fact compels us to look to some other quarter for the source of the gold, supply which reaches. Shanghai, and tends to support the conviction, or rather the information, upon 5,292.30 | which our correspondent states that he has 1,676.45 | noted. The imports of gold dust with 28,877.90 | Singapore, as shewn in the article referred 70,941.24 to, represented only a portion of the total 28.4 0.32 export of the precious metal from Pahang. 894.50 We are given to understand that indefinite but large quantities found their way to 33,736.52 China, to Japan, Siam, the Phillipines. Whether this much desired result come soon or $991,928.58 | come late, it is only a great development of gold production, such as many wellskilled persons anticipate with regard to Pahang, that can help us to this end.
